

One morning William got up early to take Skye for a walk. She was lying in her comfortable bed in the kitchen next to the guinea pigs' home. He didn't put a collar or lead on Skye. She played with other dogs in the park and was having so much fun that she crashed into her friend Bobby the Labrador. They bumped heads. Skye fell to the ground and her mouth was bleeding a lot, but she got up and the bleeding slowed down. William took her home. Skye seemed fine now so he thought she would be OK. He put the TV on and let the guinea pigs out to run around.

He opened Skye's toy box in case she wanted to play with her toys. But she sniffed around her empty water bowl while William ate his breakfast. Her tongue was out and she was panting. After the cartoon programme finished he filled Skye's water bowl. She drank almost all of it and started to chase the guinea pigs. They hid under the dresser. Skye lay on the floor waiting for them to come out.

After a while, William decided to do some training with Skye. "Down," he said. Skye lay down. "Good girl," said William and gave her a bit of his chocolate bar. She was watching him eating his breakfast so he gave her some of his toast and jam, too.

He got Skye's food bowl and the pack of dog food. He wasn't sure how much to give her so he just filled her bowl. Then he got her brush and carefully brushed her.
